Occupation: Economics Professor

Hello neighbors! I am an economics professor at Glendale College, a father of two, and a dedicated environmentalist.

I led the Glendale Environmental Coalition in our community's fight to replace an expensive, dirty gas plant with renewable energy. After hundreds showed up to rallies at City Hall, we won—and the City conceded that our modern, clean energy plan will save residents $174 million. Just as we predicted!

Glendale is at a crossroads. We have seen a rash of out-of-scale developments change the face of our downtown. Mansionization and hillside development threaten our single-family neighborhoods. At the same time, our infrastructure has not kept pace, leading to worsening traffic and blackouts. Our streets are increasingly unsafe to walk and bike. Despite all the development, many still struggle to find affordable housing.

Just as I did with the fight for clean energy, I plan to leverage my background in economics to find creative and cost-effective solutions to these problems.

I am not taking money from property developers or corporate PACs. Once in office, I will be accountable only to the public.

I hope you'll join us as we fight for a more livable, affordable, and sustainable Glendale!
